Overview of the year 2025

This is the center's sixth annual report. Previous annual reports, as well as up-to-date information on the center's activities, are available on our website: <https://www.helsinki.fi/en/networks/centre-social-data-science>

Research

Our research is both (1) substantive—addressing societies' digital transformation, wellbeing, and health—and (2) methodological, focusing on the development and critical reflection of research methods. Their interplay leads to productive tensions in research work, identifying areas for substantive breakthroughs supported by cutting-edge methods or methodological issues informed by research practice.

See publications for full breath of our contributions; in 2025, we were involved in following funded research projects:

- Digital Ideologies: Interrogating the politics of information systems (PI: Nelimarkka)
- Lobbaus sosiaalisessa mediassa (co-PI: Juho Vesa and Nelimarkka)
- Median tekoälymurros ja demokratia (co-PIs Henrik Rydenfelt, Thomas Olsson and Nelimarkka)

In addition, our PhD students work on their PhD thesis through various arrangements.

Teaching

As in previous years, most of our teaching is in the Contemporary societies master's program, and we also offer courses in doctoral studies. See full list of teaching in the appendix.

A new addition is the launch of the Liberal Arts and Sciences bachelor's program, which is being prepared for 2025 and for which the first students will be selected in the spring of 2026.

A major effort this past year has been the preparation of degree requirements for 2026-2030, during which we also renewed the course selection and improved their presentation.

Events and activities

During the past year, the centre hosted and arranged various events and activities. As is tradition, the older students organized a pizza evening for the first-year master's students. On May 9, a discussion event was held on Zoom for students who had applied and been selected for the spring intake of social data science studies. The first hour was with staff, and the second hour was reserved for discussion between current and potential new SDS students. New this year, on December 9, a discussion event called Social Data Science Open was arranged to potential applicants interested in social data science via remote connections. There were 14 participants at the event, seven of whom were students.

Michel Greeanacre, a renowned professor from Universitat Pompeu Fabra, Barcelona, visited June 9th to 18th. On June 11, he gave a lecture entitled “The Joy of the L1 Norm”

(<https://flamma.helsinki.fi/en/group/ajankohtaista/news/-/uutinen/michael-greenacres-visiting-lecture-the-joy-of-the-l1-norm-on-1162025/41682444>).

On November 28, the centre hosted FIN-CLARIAH Day with the theme “Annotating Social Data”, <https://www.dariah.fi/event/fin-clariah-day-annotating-social-data/>. The morning was reserved for presentations, and the rest of the day was for workshops.

The centre also joined the Shared Work Environment pilot, which aims to develop research workspaces.

Hosting services and infrastructures

CSDS continues to host a range of services and infrastructures that support data-intensive social science research across disciplines.

- The Methods Clinic —offered every Friday by CSDS and HSSH— is a weekly drop-in Zoom consultation where researchers and doctoral students can get guidance on research planning, data collection, analysis, and interpretation. The Methods Clinic allows researchers across different Central Campus disciplines to receive timely, tailored help with real research challenges, lowering barriers to methodological support and making advanced expertise more accessible to the whole University community.
- CSDS has continued its involvement in the infrastructure development for social sciences and humanities through DARIAH-FI. In 2025, this work included work on image analysis capabilities and tools for Finnish social media data. The FIN-CLARIAH Day hosted by CSDS in November (see Events and activities) served as an important forum for sharing this work with the wider research community.
- CSDS has supported the Faculty in the use of FIONA (Statistics Finland) resources and forward collaborations with Statistics Finland.
- CSDS also provides its expertise in the University of Helsinki Citizen Barometer (steering group) and Finnish Social Data Archive (advisory board).

Next steps for future years

Teaching courses to Master's and PhD students

CSDS will continue to develop its educational offerings by building on the new Liberal Arts and Sciences bachelor's program and refining the Social Data Science track in Contemporary Societies master's program. New and updated courses will integrate cutting-edge methods in AI, machine learning, and ethical data science, with emphasis on practical hands-on training and interdisciplinary collaboration. CSDS will also look for further opportunities to develop PhD students' activities for engage doctoral researcher more to community and peer learning.

Hosting services and infrastructures

Capacity and services emphasis CSDS will support the growing needs of data-intensive research by remaining active in infrastructure projects, including FIN-CLARIAH. In parallel, continued support for the Methods Clinic and training provision across the Central Campus will ensure that methodological capacity in the social sciences and humanities remains strong at the University of Helsinki.
